Working and Learning Remotely in NKUST

With the surge of local COVID cases in mid-May, we moved all in-person classes to virtual classrooms. Also, to ensure our community safe during this hard time, half of our faculties have been working remotely and the other half in-office.

The crisis forced everyone in the community to get up to speed as classes moved online nearly overnight. Never before have we adopted working and learning remotely on such a large scale as we did this May. Some classes might be rescheduled. Likewise, the faculty members and staffs working on campus have to spend extra attention to ensure their in-person communications or decisions being shared with their colleagues working remotely. Everyone was doing their best to fulfill their duty.

Fighting against the pandemic requires every individual to be involved. As long as we stay at home as possible as we can, we believe that the hardest days of remote learning and working will end soon.

Stay home and stay safe. We will get through this together.
